The Opportunity

As a Production Engineer, you will be responsible for overseeing continuous improvement of our manufacturing processes and short to medium term production planning. You will identify and implement improvements to production processes for current products, and design production processes for new products. You will be based at our Coleman location, but your role will cover both facilities in Coleman and Bloomfield.

Responsibilities:

- Working with our existing team to identify and implement plant efficiencies and improve work flow throughout our 2 facilities
- Work closely with our existing engineering department to ensure the availability of production drawings
- Production planning 2 to 3 months ahead to ensure the on-time availability of the elements of production, including production drawings, raw and manufactured materials and parts, labour and equipment
- Working with the existing production foreman, who is responsible for the immediate day-to-day running of the manufacturing facility, to ensure production proceeds uninterrupted and production targets are met
- Developing flexible manufacturing systems and procedures.
- Implementing programs to allow optimum utilization of machinery, materials and other resources
- Designing, developing and conducting work simplification programs
- Developing performance standards
- Supervising and training, or overseeing the training of, employees in new production techniques

Required Qualifications:

- Industrial or Mechanical Degree in Engineering or equivalent training and experience
- Experience in production line manufacturing
- Experience in manufacturing process design and implementation
- Experience in Continuous Improvement implementation
- Knowledge of existing and emerging manufacturing techniques, processes and programs such as Lean, Kan-ban, 6-Sigma etc.
- Experience in production planning
- Strong communication skills
- The ability to drive projects through to completion
